Freefall

From Writer/Director, Kenton Bartlett

A brilliant neurologist becomes obsessed with perfecting a memory-implanting technology to free herself from a haunted past. Her life takes a turn for the nightmarish when she experiments on herself.

SYNOPSIS:

Dr. Molly Caine is a world-class neurologist at the forefront of a groundbreaking invention called The Mind's Eye. This newly developed technology is capable of recording and projecting thoughts, dreams, and memories. On the cusp of her discovery, Molly is rewarded international acclaim, notoriety, and a large investment to work on her next project.

Having lost her mother to Alzheimer's at an early age, she aims to expand The Mind's Eye technology and create a memory-implanting device that will hopefully cure Alzheimer's and provide closure for her loss.

As an over-achieving daddy's girl, her endeavor for the cure intensifies as her surviving father similarly battles the crippling memory disease. Her only hope to save him is completing the promised machine before investors revoke her funding and resources.

Her ambition for the project exceeds her abilities, but she refuses to admit defeat. She alienates her colleagues and spends every last dollar to finish, but it's not enough.

With her extended deadline quickly approaching and few options remaining, she violates protocol and tests the risky machine on herself. In a fortunate turn of events, the machine proves to be an oasis of relief from her problems. It gives her a sense of calm in the storm and provides a renewed source of energy to attack her struggles with a clear head.

As her ethical boundaries blur, she manipulates the machine to create an alternate version of her past: a version void of her failings as a lover, a mother, and a human. As addiction sets in, she struggles to balance the surmounting problems and stop the world from crumbling around her.
